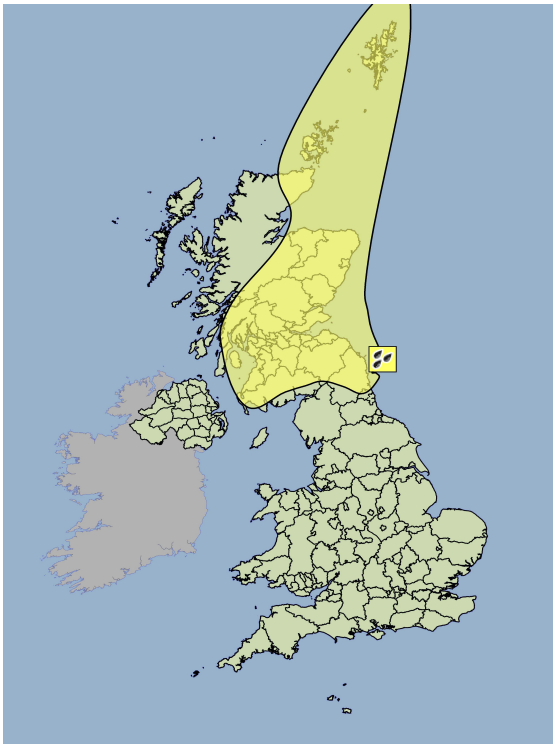
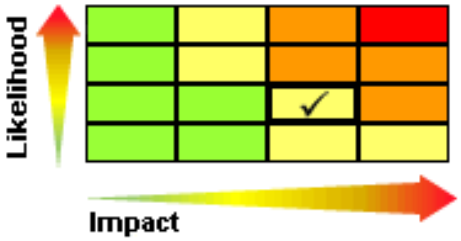
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
An area of low pressure will continue to track north to the east of Scotland this afternoon. This will bring some strong winds to land areas in northeast UK and also gales, locally severe gales, to sea areas on the southern flank of the low. Meanwhile, heavy rain will occur at times across Scotland and the far northeast of England for a time today, with some short duration torrential rainfall in places. Although rainfall amounts will vary considerably, there is scope for a further 10 to 20mm in some areas.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Rain

Valid from 13:50 on Sun, 28th Jul 2013 until 23:00 on Sun, 28th Jul 2013

Areas of heavy, thundery rain will continue to move north across northeastern England and then over much of Scotland during the rest of today. The rain will then clear from the south, although lingering across the far north of Scotland well into the evening. Strong winds are also likely in eastern and northern Scotland through this afternoon and this evening.

The public should be aware of the risk of localised disruption, mainly due to surface water flooding.

This is an update to the warning issued yesterday.
